Modernizing Curriculum for Equitable Opportunities in Learning: A Leader's Role

October 9, 2018 , 8:30—11:30 AM or 12:30—3:30 PM

Personalizing, individualizing, standards-based, student-centered, learner-centered learning? There is an urgency for school leaders to move from traditional schools to learner-centered cultures, but which model or system is best? To move forward, leaders must clearly understand the differences in both the instruction and philosophies. This shift is complex and demands a special set of leadership behaviors and actions.

Join us as we explore numerous models for learner-centered learning and focus on the nuances and leadership behaviors most prudent for this type of change. Unger will share strategies and tools for translating ideas into implemented changes.

Participants will:

- Evaluate the differences between various types of learner-centered learning models.
- Learn various strategies for maximizing 1:1 screen cultures.
- Explore frameworks that can be used to support the creation of learner-centered cultures.
- Examine leadership behaviors critical for success.
- Analyze learner-centered cultures as a means to provide equity and opportunity.

Who Should Attend: Education leaders –principals, assistant principals, instructional coaches, teacher leaders, district leadership, and all others interested.

About the Presenter: Yancy Unger has coached school leaders for more than a dozen years on guiding complex change, curriculum design and learning, and educational technology. Before becoming an education coach, the Innovative Learning Advisor with the Indiana Department of Education, and the Director of Innovative Learning in the Bloomington, Indiana area. Yancy continues to use what he has learned about public education and organizational behavior to coach effectiveness in school leaders wanting to transform their schools.

We will not come close to learner centered models until we redefine curriculum....
