Workshop description:

With onsite transliterating life as we know it having come to a screeching halt, we have all been forced to recreate ourselves in this new “remote world of work”. It is a steep learning curve indeed! This class will help you embrace this new world by helping you de-stress regarding the “newness”, become familiar with new online platforms, and tweaking and practicing receptive strategies based on onsite techniques while remembering our Code of Conduct. Through whole group and small group activities, partner work and break out “rooms” with deaf consumers, we will use combinations of discussion, hands-on practice and games to familiarize participants with this remote world while also practicing receptive strategies for communication provision.

- Participants will discuss self-care techniques as they relate to coping with stress brought on by our pandemic situation; participants will be able to name and describe 3 techniques for self-care
- Participants will revisit the Cued Language Transliterators Code of Conduct and recognize which tenets may be obscured by remote transliteration; participants will create solution sets based on these revelations in small groups
- Participants will become familiar with various platforms for providing remote transliteration; participants will practice using at least one of the platforms and name 3 pros and cons related to providing linguistic-specific information through these platforms (including prosody, phonemic representation)
- Participants will experience transliteration within at least one platform with at least one deaf cueing consumer in group activities; participants will discuss and describe any communication barriers observed or experienced in each platform and come up with at least 2 strategies that were employed or that would have enhanced the quality of communication
- Participants will assess each activity through journal entries to include observations, techniques, strategies and emotional “buy in”, and how these relate to future remote and onsite work

Presenter:

Jane Dolan is a nationally certified cued language transliterator and a transliterator trainer for Language Matters, Inc. Jane's family was the very first to learn to cue from the inventor of Cued Speech, Dr. R. Orin Cornett. Her family then began cueing English with her older sister, Leah. This makes Jane the first native hearing cuer and one of the first cueing transliterators. Jane worked for several years at the Cued Speech Center in Raleigh, North Carolina, where she taught many cued American English classes and did transliterator mentoring. For the last fifteen years, Jane has worked as a freelance cued language transliterator, primarily in the post-secondary educational setting. She is passionate about the proper practice of cued language transliteration and is an active transliterator trainer with LMI. Jane has also served as president of the North Carolina Interpreter Transliterator Licensing Board.
