Course Description: In this engaging workshop, we will cover specific points to help related service providers transition from a caseload model to a workload model. We will identify how a caseload model differs from a workload model and why a caseload model is holding you and your school from achieving goals. Research related to occupational therapy and using a workload approach will be addressed to show how this model can work. After that, we will look at your specific caseload and how it may be improved on. And finally, I will support you in creating a personalized plan for moving to a workload approach and maintaining it.

Instructor: Jayson Davies has been an occupational therapist for over ten years in Southern California. He created the OT Schoolhouse website and podcast in 2017 as a way to support occupational therapists transitioning to or currently working in educational systems. Jayson believes that OT practitioners have much to offer the students and staff in our schools. He would like to see every school-based OT practitioner supporting all students using a workload model and tiered interventions. In addition to supporting other therapists, Jayson also advises occupational therapy students on their thesis projects at the university level. Jayson is the owner of Schoolhouse Education, LLC and OTSchoolhouse.com.
